

Jim Catallo joined the research faculty of the LSU in Biogeochemistry in 1989. He earned his B.S. degree from Tulane, MS from LSU, and PhD from William and Mary. He did postdoctoral work as a NIH and NSF Fellow at the Medical College of Wisconsin and Duke University, respectively.

His research interests are quantum organic chemistry, earth system science, and high energy aqueous organic chemistry. He is currently an Associate Professor in the Comparative Biomedical Science Dept. of the LSU School of Veterinary Medicine.